After travelling widely, both around France and further afield, she spent 10 years working in London as a writer and editor for local guides and listings magazines, as well as producing award-winning short fiction. In 2005, after living in France for a year, she rediscovered London with her young sons while researching the first edition of Frommers London with Kids. She now divides her time between France and Manchester, and is also the author of the companion to this guide, Normandy with Your Family.
